Types of commercial and office buildings Robertson has experience with include office complexes, single- and multi-story office buildings, and hybrid buildings that combine conventional materials with the strength of steel.

Count on Robertson's Experience with Commercial and Office Facilities:

- Engineering, drafting, and project management assistance for the design and manufacture of structural systems
- Unique steel packages to fit your needs, developed with conventional or metal roof and wall systems
- Single- and multi-story systems to support administrative space as well as office and meeting areas
- Virtually maintenance-free steel roofs with high insulation values can conserve energy while reducing operating and maintenance costs
- Hybrid steel buildings preserve the intent of architectural design by integrating with conventional construction materials, including glass, brick, stone, and other veneers

Architectural designs ensure a beautiful building and faster construction means your Robertson building is open for business sooner.

A custom designed Robertson building is designed to be fabricated using a pre-determined inventory of raw materials and manufacturing methods that can efficiently satisfy a wide range of structural and aesthetic design requirements. The ability for Robertson products to integrate well with traditional construction methods, including glass, brick, stone, and other veneers, means that your building will reflect your corporate image.

Robertson building solutions offer design flexibility and limitless scalability, which allows for any changes and the ability to accommodate any unexpected growth. Increasing the length of an engineered building system is easily done by removing an end wall, adding additional frames, wall and roof panels, and finally reattaching the wall.
